QUALITY OF ILLINOIS WATERS.

Large Amount of Pollution in Most of State's Surface Water Supply.

The quality of the water that may be found at any point along the larger streams within or bordering the state of Illinois is shown in a report which may be obtained, on application, from the United States geological survey. The investigation that led to this report was carried on under cooperation between the federal survey and the state water survey of Illinois, and the report was first published several years ago as water-supply paper, No. 239, but the large demand for it has necessitated its re-release.

The state of Illinois is well provided with water supplies, but nearly all of them are surface waters, and most of them are so greatly polluted as to be unfit for domestic use without purification. They also contain so much dissolved mineral matter and so much suspended material as to be unsuitable for many manufacturing purposes, yet by proper treatment they may be rendered safe for drinking and suitable for all industrial uses.

The average amount of water used each day in cities of the United States varies from 30 to 120 gallons per capita. Of this the amount used for drinking is not much over one-half gallon per capita. It is of the greatest importance that this one-half gallon shall be free from the germs of disease, notably those of typhoid fever, and shall be reasonably clear and reasonable free from taste.

RANDOLPH

Miss Verna May Jones Bride of Arthur Leopold Garlarneau.

The Baptist church was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday evening, when Arthur Leopold Garlarneau and Verna May, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Jones, were united in marriage by the pastor of the church, Rev. J. H. Thompson. The church was finely decorated with golden glow, golden red and ferns and the pulpit was also massed with the same flowers. Miss Edith Marcott presided at the organ and gave several selections while the guests were being seated by the ushers, Harry and Carleton Jones and Raymond Briggs. At the appointed hour the clergyman came from the chapel at the right and met, in front of the pulpit, Edson Gifford, the best man, and the groom, as they came up the front aisle. Here they paused for the bride, who advanced with her father, preceded by the ring-bearer, May Lucia, and the flower girl, Margaret Manchester. Next in the bridal train walked the maid of honor, Miss Eula Holland of Proctorville, the bridesmaids, Miss Rena Garlarneau of Montreal, a sister of the groom, Miss Grace Burke of Sharon and Miss Hazel Danyow and the ushers. The bride was gown in white satin, cut low and trimmed with Oriental lace. A veil fell to the edge of her gown and she carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley. The maid of honor wore yellow crepe de chine, with white trimmings. The bridesmaids carried arm bouquets of white asters and Miss Garlarneau was gown with white lace over pink silk. Miss Burke wore green silk with lace over dress and Miss Danyow crushed strawberry crepe de chine. Following the service the bridal party went to the chapel, which was finely decorated, where there was a reception. Mr. and Mrs. Garlarneau, being assisted by the bride's parents and other members of the party. The wedding cake in white boxes was distributed by Mrs. Harry Marcott. Beautiful gifts from loving friends, of silver, linen, cut glass and other articles, were in abundance. The party left at once for Mascoma lake at Enfield, N. H., where they are to pass a few days, and on their return will take up their residence in the Lamson cottage on South street. Miss Mildred Hatch caught the bouquet which was tossed by the bride.

The entire amount realized from the different entertainments and private subscriptions on Saturday week amounted to $434.78. The expenditures amounted to only $30.84.

Mrs. George H. Slack and her daughter, Ethel, came on Wednesday to W. P. Flint's, where they will stay till Saturday and then go to their home in Hillsdale, Mich. Mrs. Slack has been with her mother in Highgate for several weeks assisting in her care.

Mr. Meader was born in Danville July 26, 1833, and had been a resident of this town for several years. For 20 years he was engaged in a machine shop at Montpelier. For his first wife he married Mrs. Laura (Parker) Skinner, and to them were born two daughters, who died of diphtheria within a week of each other. On April 7, 1909, he married Mrs. Josephine (Kibby) Spicer, and since then his home had been on Weston street. CURRENT COMMENT

Buying Bulgaria.

If Bulgaria enters the war on the side of the quadruple entente it will be only after she has been well paid by the four neighbors that surround her. From each of them she demands a cession of territory. Turkey is believed to have complied already, ceding the strip on which the railway runs from Adrianople down the west side of the Maritza to the Aegean port of Dedeagatch. If this has been done it must have been for the purpose of securing the neutrality, if not the aid, of Bulgaria for the triple alliance. But the astute spider who weaves his web under the crown at Sofia throws his filaments farther, and will doubtless at the last be found where he can get the most.

Ferdinand of Bulgaria wants Ferdinand of Roumania to restore the small territorial wedge extending from Turtukai on the Danube to Cape Chelighra on the Black sea, which Roumania acquired under the treaty of Bucharest, and compliance is probable, though the Roumanians will be very reluctant to part with the fortress of Silistria. Bulgaria demands from Greece the port of Kavala, with the hinterland which includes the towns of Seres and Drama, a district in which the population is mainly Greek, and in which the Bulgarian troops committed excesses before the Greek forces drove them back to their borders in the war of 1913. There is good reason for the disinclination of Greece to let Bulgaria have this region, which, however, may ultimately be given under guarantees.

Serbia is required to make the largest sacrifice. In 1912 she fought her way to the Adriatic, but was ordered back by the great powers, and she pushed southward to within 40 miles of the Aegean, but had to let Greece step in between at Salonica. Of course, Serbia cannot possibly get Kavala, from which she is distant 100 miles—a distance which will be increased to 160 miles if she cedes her Vardar valley territory to Bulgaria and retires westward to Monastir. The quadruple entente ought to make sure of Serbia receiving Bosnia-Herzegovina as compensation. Austria is seemingly to get all she asks for as the price of her sword. It is not a very edifying spectacle, this buying of Bulgarian aid. But there is no other way of getting the central state to stand with the other members of the former league against the Austro-German project of a drive through the Balkans to save Turkey.—Boston Herald.

Citizen Bluejackets.

Since it is our first line of defense, why no Plattsburg for the navy? Officers and men of the navy are subject to even larger peril of wholesale diminution than officers and men of the land forces. Ships are now under-rebuilt because the law limits the number to what a day of fewer ships required. That no doubt will be corrected by the next Congress, but it will not obviate the need of a citizen jackie reserve to supplement the naval militia as the citizen soldiery plan would supplement the National Guard. Technical training is more necessary on sea than in the field, and statistics of the lessening number of native sailors indicate the narrowing limits of resources for a naval emergency.

Among merchant marines, yachtsmen, motorboats, marine engineers, shipping agents, electricians, machinists, business and professional men with a salty tang in their blood, the opportunity for the Plattsburg sort of preparation should be offered. The navy league suggests that the training station at the Great Lakes could accommodate 1,000 patriotic volunteers for schooling in naval elements. As for that, various ports on the seaboard are equally adapted to the enterprise—and at least one should be in New England, where the sea traditions hold strongest. Naval militiamen will understand at first, that these enterprises and experiments are for rousing portions of the public hitherto thoughtless or indifferent to a sense of their responsibility in defense, a realization that since they, in a crisis, would be drafted for service, some details of that service would better be familiarized—even if, so to say, the little navy men "don't" differ between the shifter rod and the strake, the scuttle-butt and the fire control.—Boston Transcript.

Circumspection.

"My boy," said the editor of the Billville Bugle to the new reporter, "you lack caution. You must learn not to state things as facts until they are proved facts—otherwise you are very apt to get us into libel suits. Do not say, 'the cashier who stole the funds'; say, 'the cashier who is alleged to have stolen the funds.' That's all now, and—ah—turn in a stickful about that second ward social last night."

Owing to an influx of visitors it was late in the afternoon before the genial editor of the Bugle caught a glimpse of the great family daily. Half way down the social column he read the following cautious paragraph: "It is rumored that a card party was given last evening to a number of reputed ladies of the second ward. Mrs. Smith, gossip says, was the hostess, and the festivities are reported to have continued until 10:30 in the evening. It is alleged that the affair was a social function given to the ladies of the second ward Clink club, and that, with the exception of Mrs. James Rindiger, who says she came from Leavitt Junction, none but members were present. The reported hostess insists that coffee and water alone were served as refreshments. The Smith women claim to be the wife of John Smith, the so-called 'Honest Shoe Man' of 315 East State street."

Shortly afterward a whirling mass, claiming to be a reporter on the Bugle, flew 15 feet from the street and landed with what bystanders assert was a dull, sickening thud.—Puck.

Calculation of the Strength of Electric Currents.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 3.—Probably the most accurate method for the determination of the value of the strength of an electrical current in absolute measure is by means of the Rayleigh current balance, in which the current to be measured is passed in series through two parallel circular coils of unequal radii, one of which is suspended from the beam of a balance. The distance between the planes of the coils is varied until the force of attraction between the two coils is a maximum, and the value of the force is obtained by adding weights to the other arm of the balance until its equilibrium is restored. Since the maximum force obtainable depends on the ratio of the radii of the coils alone, and not on their individual dimensions, it is only necessary to determine further the ratio of the radii of the coils, and this may be done with great accuracy by electrical means.

The constant of the instrument, that is, the maximum force for unit current for the coils in question, has been obtained in the past by interpolation between various assumed distances of the coils, in the neighborhood of the critical value for which the force is a maximum. For, although the general formulas of Maxwell and Nagoka give the value of the force for any two given coils, at any assumed distance with great accuracy, no formula has been heretofore published for calculating at what distance the force becomes a maximum. To supply this lack there is derived in a paper just published by the bureau of standards, department of commerce, entitled, "The Calculation of the Maximum Force Between Two Parallel Coils, Circular Currents," a formula which gives the critical distance as a function of the ratio of the radii. The latter part of the paper is devoted to the development of methods for facilitating the calculations. The formulas are illustrated by numerical examples and tables, and the new formulas are shown to give results in agreement with those derived by more indirect and laborious method of interpolation.

The Clutter of City Fire Escapes.

In the September American Magazine John A. Moroso writes a splendid story about New York City firemen. In the course of the story, Mr. Moroso describes in part as follows the cluttered condition of fire escapes in the crowded east side of New York:

"When the spring comes there ain't an inch of space on the fire escapes, what for the soap box refrigerators and the ambition of each signora to have a prettier swinging garden than her neighbor."

"I've seen red geraniums growing in little pots on Elizabeth street fire escapes that were so bright and big that you would stop and look twice, thinking the window casings were ablaze. It is easy enough to imagine about fifty men, women and children on each of six floors trying to get to the sidewalk through the window to make room for servo, top-heavy geraniums, bottles of milk, and perhaps the baggage of the latest arrival from Italy pushed through the window to make room for the new citizen during the night."

Says Automobiles are Making Farm Life More Attractive.

Farm and Fireside, the national farm paper published at Springfield, O., has been offering prizes for the best letters entitled, "What's an Automobile Worth?" In the current issue the prize winning letters are published. Following is an extract from one of these letters:

"By this speedy tireless helper you have a bigger and better market for butter, eggs, poultry, fruit, vegetables, all the smaller products of the farm, and you don't need to kill a whole day going to town either. The boys can go to see moving pictures of the war, hear a concert by Sousa's band, or even see the state league ball game, when the work is not too pressing."

"The old homestead has become the most attractive place on earth for both the boys and the girls. The old folks are twenty years younger, and spruced up like young fellows. They were going to retire to the city, but thought better of it when they bought the car."

Thought Charles Dickens Was Still Alive.

In the September American Magazine Harry R. Smith writes a highly entertaining article entitled, "Some Inside Information About the Musical Play." Mr. Smith has written dialogue and lyrics of one hundred and thirty musical pieces. His article is filled with interesting stories of his adventures. He tells the following story in connection with his first performance of "Don Quixote."

"On the opening night there were calls for the authors—loud cries for De Koven and a few moderate ones for Smith—and then, after we had made our bows and were on the point of retiring, quite a number of persons in the audience called loudly for Cervantes!"

"This reminds me of what happened to Lee Arthur, the playwright. Mr. Arthur was walking rapidly along Broadway when a manager accosted him and demanded to know where he was going."

"Out to New Rochelle to see Charles Dickens," replied the playwright briskly. "I am writing a play with him."

"The deuce, you say," said the manager with sincere surprise. "I didn't know he lived in New Rochelle."

"Don Quixote" met with considerable success, but in trying to get as much of the novel into the play as possible, we had introduced a great deal of the humor that might be called "acrobatic"—the fight with the windmills and the like. We had Mr. Barnabee falling off a horse and being knocked by the arms of the windmill into the middle of the stage, and a lot of stuff of that kind that seemed very funny to us at the time. But that actor, being no longer youthful, used to find the work too strenuous. After every performance he would show up with a new assortment of plasters and poultices. Finally he declared that he could stand it no longer, that he would quit playing "Don Quixote" or go to the hospital. And, absurd as it may seem, this was really the reason for giving up "Don Quixote."
